

CHINA'S URBANIZATION

China's urbanization over the past three decades is a historic phenomenon of scale and speed. In the 1980's, it's very much different. China, there were less than 100 million of "urban" population (a fifth of the total population). However, by 2015, 700 million (half of the total population) lived in urban areas, marking the ever largest population movement in the history of mankind. In 2015, China and EU have signed a cooperation partnership to jointly address the challenges of urbanization.

HOUKOU

Registration in China is controlled by the Hukou system. A household register issued in 1955. The Hukou system controls the migration of people from rural areas to urban areas. It is a key factor in the urbanization process in China.

million people at least would be required for total investment in urbanization.

120

million hectares of agricultural land, more the land area, for the Chinese people to live on.

2011-2015

in the urbanization process of China, the first time that urban population has exceeded the rural population, and the beginning of the process of urbanization.

36 million people of social subgroups living in the urban areas in China, which is the first time that the urban population has exceeded the rural population.

In February 2015, the ministry issued the "National Urban System Plan" and designated five major cities as National central cities.
