

The background of the slide is a traditional Chinese ink wash painting. It depicts a serene landscape with a winding river or path that leads the eye from the foreground towards the background. The river is rendered with light, flowing strokes, while the surrounding mountains and foliage are painted with more textured, layered ink washes in various shades of grey, brown, and blue. A small, simple boat is visible on the river in the middle ground. The overall style is characteristic of classical Chinese art, emphasizing harmony and natural beauty.

Firestone,1922-01-01 The geography anthropology and natural history of this volume present a world a little different from that which is outlined in modern text books and yet one that is familiar It is the traditional world of wonder which until yesterday was believed to be the real world A map of it would show the same continents and some of the same races of men and species of animals that are delineated in any atlas of to day but there would be changes Asia would bear far away into the unknown spaces of the East A shadowy continent would stretch across the open waters of the Indian Ocean The clouds and darkness of supernatural terrors or dimly remembered fates would shroud the Atlantic the Green Sea of Gloom of the Arab geographers Looming vaguely in the mists southwest of Gibraltar one would discern a lost continent One would see there also smaller bodies of land which on a second glance are seen no more Within the contours of continents and islands there would be countries which seem to belong both to fable and to fact The Incense Kingdom would be there on both sides of the Red Sea but its sumptuous ritual and swooning odors would suggest little now to be found in southern Arabia and Somaliland The Spice Islands would be there but wearing the splendor of a world desire of which no trace is left to the Moluccas There would be seen the haughty realm of Prester John and the vast pastures of Gog and Magog but on a modern map of Asia one does not find the country of the priest king and must look under other names for the terrifying races of Hebrew and Moslem legend On the map would appear the gold port of Ophir and the golden land of Havilah but the Arab haven was silted up ages ago and the abandoned mine workings of Rhodesia minister no more to the pride of kings The Arcadia that it would picture of pastoral innocence and bucolic song has faded from the central uplands of the Morea and the rugged mountain land hears no longer the pipes of Pan There are other regions of enchantment deserts where demon voices tempted the traveler from his track mountains where cymbals clashed and lights gleamed at night countries of serene charm which were placed so far away that few people ever reached them Of these regions the modern maps know nothing If the map of the traditional world were pictorial as such maps ought to be it would show strange races of men in Asia in Africa in South America in the sea washed islands and in the seas themselves There would be Amazons sweeping down upon the Mediterranean settlements pygmies battling with cranes in Upper Egypt satyrs pursuing women in African woodlots troglodytes of Arabia looking on with indifference while strangers maltreated their offspring The vistas of Asia and Africa would disclose men taking their siestas beneath the shade of their own gigantic feet sleeping at night under the cover of their elephant like ears supporting life by smelling flowers rather than eating food Sixteenth century charts of the Spanish Americas would reveal the unsuspected fact that these creatures dwelt also in the new world and that mermaids sang upon its coasts as upon those of the old
