Family Engagement Guide

Welcome to fifth grade! What an exciting time for your child. This year, students begin to understand how they learn best as they process new information. Fifth grade is an important milestone as they prepare to meet greater challenges in school.

Your child's understanding at this stage of development allows them to read and write longer, tackle complex math problems, delve into research, and better handle planning for long-term projects. Supporting your child through their journey to independence makes a positive difference as your fifth grader makes new friends. Concerns about fitting in may be increasing as well. Be patient when it comes to their social concerns, and be aware of your child's social media usage. You will need to help your fifth grader balance school expectations with friendships, extracurricular activities, family, and time using digital devices.

Maintaining communication with your child's teacher helps provide clear expectations for success. Find out how your fifth grader's teacher prefers to communicate with families. During this year, it is important that your fifth grader has your support as they continue to learn how to solve complex problems, reason, and process information.
