Gender and Nation in the Spanish Modernist Novel Roberta Johnson, 2003 Offering a fresh revisionist analysis of Spanish fiction from 1900 to 1940 this study examines the work of both men and women writers and how they practiced differing forms of modernism As Roberta Johnson notes Spanish male novelists emphasized technical and verbal innovation in representing the contents of an individual consciousness and thus were more modernist in the usual understanding of the term Female writers on the other hand were less aesthetically innovative but engaged in a social modernism that focused on domestic issues gender roles and relations between the sexes Compared to the more conventional even reactionary ways their male counterparts treated such matters Spanish women's fiction in the first half of the twentieth century was often revolutionary The book begins by tracing the history of public discourse on gender from the 1890s through the 1930s a discourse that included the rise of feminism Each chapter then analyzes works by female and male novelists that address key issues related to gender and nationalism the concept of intrahistoria or an essential Spanish soul modernist uses of figures from the Spanish literary tradition notably Don Quixote and Don Juan biological theories of gender prevalent in the 1920s and 1930s and the growth of an organized feminist movement that coincided with the burgeoning Republican movement This is the first book dealing with this period of Spanish literature to consider women novelists such as Maria Martinez Sierra Carmen de Burgos and Concha Espina alongside canonical male novelists including Miguel de Unamuno Ramon del Valle Inclan and Pio Baroja With its contrasting conceptions of modernism Johnson's work provides a compelling new model for bridging the gender divide in the study of Spanish fiction

ante las grandes obras maestras que desempeñan un papel vital en el entramado de convicciones, certezas y saberes prácticos que intervienen en nuestra visión del mundo. Los ensayos reunidos en este volumen ponen el acento en el modo en que el arte actúa en nuestras vidas individual y colectivamente configurando nuestro mundo simbólico y proporcionándonos al mismo tiempo las claves para interpretarlo y transformarlo. Así, Ricardo Ibarlucía aborda aquí temas diversos desde la función cultural y social de las llamadas obras maestras hasta la secularización de la belleza en una tela de Rafael Sanzio, la erotización de la máquina en Marcel Duchamp y las vanguardias de principios del siglo XX, la poesía de Paul Celan y la música de los campos de concentración y las resonancias biográficas y filosóficas de una frase del historiador Jules Michelet conocida a través de una cita de Walter Benjamin. Ibarlucía sostiene que aun cuando no tengamos conocimiento de ellas, las obras maestras ordenan secretamente la trama de nuestra vida, quizás mucho más de lo que creemos, puesto que participan no solo en la elaboración de los criterios con los que valoramos el arte, sino también y en no menor medida en la construcción de nuestra identidad individual y colectiva. De este modo, apunta, este libro aspira a dar testimonio de una esperanza irrenunciable en la creatividad humana.
