Energy surveys and audits

Energy surveys

Energy surveys are carried out to identify areas where energy is being wasted and to provide recommendations on how to improve energy efficiency. They are a key part of any energy management strategy and can help to reduce energy costs and carbon emissions.

There are two main types of energy survey: a preliminary survey and a detailed survey. A preliminary survey is a quick and easy way to identify areas where energy is being wasted. A detailed survey is more thorough and provides more detailed recommendations.

Energy surveys can be carried out by a specialist energy surveyor or by a qualified electrician. The surveyor will visit the property and carry out a series of tests to identify areas where energy is being wasted. They will then provide a report with recommendations on how to improve energy efficiency.

Energy surveys are a cost-effective way to improve energy efficiency and reduce energy costs. They can also help to reduce carbon emissions and improve the overall energy performance of a property.

Energy audits are a more detailed type of energy survey. They involve a thorough inspection of the property to identify areas where energy is being wasted. The auditor will also carry out a series of tests to measure the energy performance of the property. They will then provide a report with recommendations on how to improve energy efficiency.
