

The background of the entire cover is a photograph of a river, likely the San Joaquin River, flowing through a valley. The river is in the foreground, with white rapids and a sandy bar. The valley is filled with green and brown vegetation. In the distance, snow-capped mountains rise against a clear blue sky. The text is overlaid on this image in white and yellow boxes.

Drowning the Dream David Carle, 2000-02-28 Imported water has transformed the Golden State's environment and quality of life In the last one hundred years land ownership patterns and real estate boosterism have dramatically altered both urban and rural communities across the entire state The key has been water from the Eastern Sierra the Colorado River and finally Northern California rivers Whoever brings the water brings the people wrote engineer William Mulholland whose leadership began the process of water irrigating unlimited growth Using first person voices of Californians to reveal the resulting changes Carle concludes that the new millennium may be the time to stop drowning the California dream With extensive use of oral histories contemporary newspaper articles and autobiographies Carle provides a rich exploration of the historic change in California showing that imported water has shaped the pattern of population growth in the state Water choices remain the primary tool he claims for shaping California's future The state's damaged environment and reduced quality of life can be corrected if Californians will step out of their historic pattern and embrace limited water supplies as a fact of life in this naturally dry region

Water and the California Dream David Carle, 2016-05-01 In the last one hundred years imported water has transformed the environment of the Golden State and its quality of life with land ownership patterns and real estate boosterism dramatically altering both urban and rural communities The key to this transformation has been expanded access to water from the Eastern Sierra the Colorado

River and Northern California rivers Whoever brings the water brings the people wrote engineer William Mulholland under whose leadership the process of growth through irrigation began Now using first person voices of Californians to reveal the resulting changes author David Carle concludes that it may be time to stop drowning the California dream of the good life with imported water Using oral histories contemporary newspaper articles and autobiographies Carle explores the historic changes in California showing how imported water has shaped the pattern of population growth in the state Because water choices remain the primary tool for shaping California's future Carle also argues that it is possible to improve both the state's damaged environment and the quality of life if Californians will step out of this historic pattern and embrace limited water supplies as a fact of life in this naturally dry region Introduction to Water in California, Updated ed Carle,2009
