

PERIA - Empathizing with Worldviews

PERIA is a research project funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNSF) that aims at developing a new method for analyzing and comparing worldviews. The acronym PERIA stands for "Perception of Empathy in Religious and Ideological Attitudes".

The project is led by Dr. Barbara Stollberg-Rilinger from the University of Zurich and involves researchers from various disciplines, including psychology, philosophy, and religious studies. The goal is to develop a methodology that can help us better understand the complex ways in which people perceive and interpret the world around them, particularly in the context of religious and ideological beliefs.

One of the key features of PERIA is its focus on empathy. By examining how different worldviews are perceived and understood, we can gain insights into the underlying values and beliefs that shape people's attitudes and behaviors. This approach allows us to move beyond a purely cognitive analysis of worldviews, and instead consider the emotional and relational aspects that are often central to their expression.

The project also aims to develop a new way of comparing worldviews. Instead of focusing on a single set of criteria or measures, PERIA seeks to explore the multiple dimensions and perspectives that are involved in the perception of different worldviews. This approach allows us to identify the strengths and weaknesses of each worldview, as well as the potential areas of conflict or cooperation between them.

Overall, PERIA represents a significant contribution to the field of comparative religion and philosophy. By providing a new methodology for analyzing and comparing worldviews, the project has the potential to open up new avenues of research and understanding, and to help us better appreciate the complexity and richness of human belief systems.

If you are interested in learning more about PERIA, please feel free to contact us at peria@uzh.ch. We would be happy to provide you with more information about our work and its implications for the study of worldviews.
