

EMOTIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Emotional development refers to a person's improving ability to recognize, regulate, and express their feelings.

THEORIES

- Attachment Theory: Explores how students overcome their attachment to their parents and replace it with self-efficacy, self-confidence, and ability to self-regulate emotions.
- Psychosocial Theory: people emotionally develop through a series of stages in life. In each stage, we have a fundamental crisis to overcome.

EXAMPLES

- Emerging ability to name feelings (7 to 24 months): Toddlers develop the ability to name feelings like happy, sad, and scared.
- Declining egocentrism (5 years and up): Children will slowly move out of egocentric thinking from about age 5 and start to develop perspective-taking and empathy for others' viewpoints.

What Develops in Emotional Development? Michael F. Mascolo, Sharon Griffin, 2013-11-22 The problem of development is central in the study of emotional life for two basic reasons First emotional life so clearly changes dramatically in the early years with new emotional reactions emerging against the backdrop of an increasing sensitivity to context and with self regulation of emotion emerging from a striking dependence on regulatory assistance from caregivers Such changes demand developmental analysis At the same time understanding such profound changes will surely inform our understanding of the nature of development more generally The complexity of emotional change when grasped will reveal the elusive nature of development itself At the outset we know that development is complex We must take seriously what is present at any given phase including the newborn period because a developmental analysis disallows something emerging from nothing Still it is equally nondevelopmental to posit that new forms of new processes were simply present in their precursors Rather development is characterized by transformations in which more complex structures and organization emerge from new integration of prior components and new capacities These new forms and organizations cannot be specified from prior conditions but are due to transactions of the evolving organism with its environment over time They are not simply in the genome and they are not simply conditioned by the environment They are the result of the developmental process

Emotional Development in Atypical Children Michael Lewis, Margaret Wolan Sullivan, 2014-03-05 Early emotional development emotional regulation and the links between emotion and social or cognitive functioning in atypically developing children have not received much attention This lack is due in part to the priorities given to the educational and therapeutic needs of these children Yet an understanding of the basic emotional processes in children with atypical development can only serve to promote more effective strategies for teaching and intervening in the lives of these children and their families and may contribute to our understanding of basic emotional processes as well When referring to emotions the editors mean some complex set of processes or abilities whether or not the topic is normal or atypical development Specifically they use the term emotion to refer to at least three things emotional expressions emotional states and emotional experiences The focus of this volume these three aspects of emotional life are affected by socialization practices maturational change and individual biological differences including in this case differences in children as a function of disability Contributors examine the development of emotions in children with organic or psychological disorders as well as those in compromised social contexts making this volume of prime importance to developmental clinical and social psychologists educators and child mental health experts

Development of Emotions and Emotion Regulation Manfred Holodynski, Wolfgang Friedlmeier, 2006-10-26 vii PREFACE It was 13 years ago that we met for the first time at a German developmental psychology conference One of us Wolfgang Friedlmeier WF was interested in ontogenetic development from a cross cultural perspective He presented a study on the development of empathy and distress in preschool age dealing with how far children from different cultures respond to comparable demands with different emotions and regulation strategies The other Manfred Holodynski MH was interested in ontogenetic development from the perspective of internalization how processes that are originally socially distributed between persons are transformed into mental processes within the individual He presented a study on the development of the emotions pride and shame in preschool age This led the two of us to discover our common interest in central issues of emotional development What role do the emotions play in an individual's activity regulation What is it exactly that is developing when we talk about emotional development Do emotional processes have a social genesis And what is the role of the early social interactions between children and their caregivers along with the obvious fact that individuals grow up and live in completely different cultures Even at this time we both already suspected that the social and cultural embedment of the individual would prove to be a key to understanding how the diversity of human emotions and their regulation develop
