Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus is a common cause of nosocomial infection and is often resistant to multiple antibiotics. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal flora of patients in a tertiary care hospital and to determine the antibiotic resistance patterns of these isolates. A total of 100 patients were screened for S. aureus in the nasal flora. The isolates were then tested for sensitivity to various antibiotics. The results showed that 60% of the patients had S. aureus in their nasal flora. The isolates were resistant to 100% of the antibiotics tested, including methicillin, vancomycin, and teicoplanin. These findings suggest that S. aureus is a significant cause of nosocomial infection and that it is often resistant to multiple antibiotics. Further studies are needed to determine the reasons for this resistance and to develop strategies to prevent and control the spread of these resistant strains.
