

Concept Review Questions and Answers—Chapter 18

18.1 Interpreting Behavior

1. Why is it more difficult to study the evolution of behavior than the evolution of structural characteristics?

Structural characteristics can leave behind physical evidence that lasts for thousands of years. Behavior rarely leaves evidence that can be preserved. Modern techniques of DNA analysis may provide assistance in following the evolution of some behavior patterns.

2. List two animal behaviors and state the significance of the behavior to the animal's reproductive success.

There are 100s of examples; nest building protects young, food storage make survival and reproduction more likely, defensive behaviors aid in survival and potential reproduction, etc.

18.2 The Problem of Anthropomorphism

3. Why do students of animal behavior reject the idea that a singing bird is happy?

We do not know what is going on in the brain of the bird so we do not know its emotional state. Studies of bird song strongly suggest that the songs are used to maintain territories and to attract mates.

4. Define anthropomorphism.

Anthropomorphism is the practice of ascribing meaning to the behavior of nonhuman animals as if they had the same motivation as humans.

18.3 Instinctive and Learned Behavior

5. List two ways in which learned and instinctive behaviors differ.

TABLE 18.1 Comparison of Instinct and Learning
Instinct	Learning
The animal is born with the behavior.	The animal is not born with the behavior.
Instinctive behavior is genetically determined.	Learned behavior is not genetically determined, but the way in which learning occurs is at least partly hereditary.
No experience is required; the behavior is done correctly the first time.	Performance improves with experience; the behavior requires practice.
The behavior cannot be changed.	The behavior can be changed.
Memory is not important.	Memory is important.
Instinctive behavior can evolve as gene frequencies change.	Changes in learned behaviors are not the result of genetic changes. However, the ability to learn clearly has genetic components.

André,2025-04-21 Contemporary students of mathematics differ considerably from those of half a century ago In spite of this many textbooks written decades ago and now considered to be classics are still prescribed for students today These texts are not suitable for today s students This text is meant for and written to today s mathematics students Set theory is a pure mathematics endeavor in the sense that it seems to have no immediate applications yet the knowledge and skills developed in such a course can easily branch out to various fields of both pure mathematics and applied mathematics Rather than transforming the reader into a practicing mathematician this book is more designed to initiate the reader to what may be called mathematical thinking while developing knowledge about foundations of modern mathematics Without this insight becoming a practicing mathematician is much more daunting The main objective is twofold The students will develop some fundamental understanding of the foundations of mathematics and elements of set theory in general In the process the student will develop skills in proving simple mathematical statements with mathematical rigor Carefully presented detailed proofs and rigorous chains of logical arguments will guide the students from the fundamental ZFC axioms and definitions to show why a basic mathematical statement must hold true The student will recognize the role played by each fundamental axiom in development of modern mathematics The student will learn to distinguish between a correct mathematical proof and an erroneous one The subject matter is presented while bypassing the complexities encountered when using formal logic
