Ergometry in Hypertensive Patients Ingomar W. Franz, 2012-12-06 Within the field of general medicine the last two decades have seen the curative procedures increasingly supplemented by func tions that can be summed up under the heading of preventive health care There is a close link between this development and the changing morbidity pattern In highly developed countries the morbidity rate attributable to infectious diseases has been much reduced while the various types of arteriosclerosis some tumorous conditions and so called functional syndromes have attained massive incidence rates Systematic epidemiologic studies have yielded the concept of risk factors i e certain exogenous and endogenous factors whose elimination ideally would make it possible to avoid the manifestation of an illness or to ensure it did not become mani fest until later in life or in a milder form The socioeconomic and sociomedical significance of these aspects is considerable as can be seen from all the statistics on the reasons for incapacity and early retirement and on the relative contributions of different illnesses to total mortality Effective avoidance of illnesses by primary prophylaxis elimination of the causes of disease or early detection of the symptoms of disease secondary prophylaxis leading to early treatment would be a particularly significant step forward since in the case of most of the conditions mentioned above only palliative forms of treatment are available and none that have any curative effect

Metabolic Adaptation to Prolonged Physical Exercise

POORTMANS, HOWALD, 2013-12-19 The Proceedings of the Second International Symposium on Biochemistry of Exercise are centered on the effects of long lasting exercise and training In the years following the first symposium which was held in Brussels in 1968 biochemistry of exercise has gained more importance in view of the increasing number of laboratories and scientific papers which are dealing with this field From the topic of the first symposium humoral modifications occurring during physical activity our points of interest have been turned to a more limited area namely long term exercise and training It was important to investigate these subjects because everyone knows that in today's sport a good performance means hours of weekly or even daily training Therefore it was of considerable interest to stimulate discussions and to clarify ideas in this particular field of human activity Our knowledge of biochemistry of exercise at the cellular level has highly progressed during the last five years Researchers have focused their interests on the sequential utilization of fuels the adaptive responses of the enzyme machinery the different types of muscle fibers The topics of the Proceedings include general subjects metabolism of carbohydrates lipids and proteins hormonal regulations electrolytes ultrastructure and fiber types of muscle cellular enzymes In the symposium the current knowledge was summarized as an introductory lecture to each of these topics by prominent authors namely J KEUL Freiburg i Br M SCHERRER Bern B SAL TIN Copenhagen P
