The Manual Wheelchair Training Guide Anita Perr, Peter Axelson, 1998-01-01 Comparison of the Level of Safety of Manual Wheelchair Use Versus Power Wheelchair Use in the Pediatric Population Heidi Asbury, Janie Hoffert, 2001

Background and Purpose Assistive devices such as wheelchairs are used by children with mobility limitations and all over the world for the purpose of increasing independence and mobility This freedom of mobility raises the issue of safety provided by either the manual or power wheelchair Researchers have looked at the safety of manual and power wheelchairs separately and identified factors that increase and decrease risks associated with wheelchair accidents Currently there is no data comparing the level of safety between manual and power wheelchair use The purpose of this study was to identify only differences in safety concerns between a manual versus a power wheelchair Methods This study was conducted as a research survey and was distributed to parents of pediatric individuals who were wheelchair users These children were living in the Portland metropolitan area and were independent in wheelchair mobility The level of safety was determined by a numerical scale Results As predicted there was no statistically significant difference in safety between power and manual wheelchair use Conclusion and Discussion Although no statistical significance was found in the total safety level significant differences were found in individual safety questions This data will be used to provide healthcare professionals caregivers and wheelchair manufacturers information so that a safer wheelchair can be prescribed designed and distributed to children with mobility limitations Selection of Manual Wheelchair Rehabsid Centre, Hospital Authority (Hong Kong, China), 1999

Manual Wheelchair for One-armed Operation Angel L. Acevedo, Marcus Assefa, Ann Bartlett, Thayer School of Engineering, 2005 Biomedical Aspects of Manual Wheelchair Propulsion Luc H. V. Raphael, 2011 The Vessa Folding Wheelchair Owner's Manual Vessa Limited, 1982* Design of a Power-Assist Hemiplegic Wheelchair Keith Nicholas Liadis, 2006 Abstract Current one handed manual wheelchairs are difficult to propel because one arm can only provide half the power that is ascertained in a two handed manual wheelchair A power assisted hemiplegic one sided paralysis wheelchair was developed that can effectively be propelled with one arm while remaining maneuverable lightweight and foldable An existing manual wheelchair was minimally modified and fitted with power assisted components that could alternatively be attached to a wide range of manual wheelchairs The design implements a motor and gear train to power the wheel on the user's affected side encoders on both rear wheels to track wheel position and a heel interface on the footrest to control steering A controls program was developed that analyzes wheel position and steering to respond to the motion of the hand driven wheel Extensive testing was performed to ensure design integrity Testing results showed that the prototype successfully met and exceeded predetermined design specifications based on industry standard testing procedures The design has the potential to deliver increased freedom to a considerable consumer base The Development of a Hydraulic Motor Drive for a Manual

Biomechanical Aspects of Manual Wheelchair Propulsion Hendricus Elias Johannes Veeger, 1992 Modelling the Stability and Maneuverability of a Manual Wheelchair with Adjustable Seating Louise Erin Thomas, 2017 Manual wheelchairs are generally designed with a fixed frame which is not optimal for every situation Spontaneous changes in seating configuration can ease transfers increase participation in social activities and extend reaching capabilities These changes also shift the centre of gravity of the system altering wheelchair dynamics In this study rigid body models of an adjustable manual wheelchair and test dummy were created to characterize changes to wheelchair stability and maneuverability for variations in backrest angle seat angle rear wheel position user position and user mass Static stability was evaluated by the tip angle of the wheelchair on an adjustable slope with maneuverability indicated by the ratio of weight on the rear wheels Dynamic stability was assessed for the wheelchair rolling down an incline with a small bump Both static and dynamic simulations were validated experimentally using motion capture of real wheelchair tips and falls Overall rear wheel position was the most influential wheelchair configuration parameter Adjustments to the seat and backrest also had a significant impact on both static and dynamic stability For wheelchairs with a more maneuverable or tippy initial configuration dynamic seating changes could be used to increase stability as required Design the Manual Wheelchair to Electric

Wheelchair, 2010 Wheeled Mobility (Wheelchair) Service Delivery U. S. Department of Health and Human Services, Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, 2013-04-09 Wheeled mobility or wheelchair use in the U S is at an all time high and growing A 2005 survey of noninstitutionalized Americans estimated that approximately 3.3 million people 1.4 % of the population 15 years of age and older used a wheelchair or similar device Of those 3.3 million approximately 1.8 million were 65 years and older 5.2 % of that population Among children under 15 years of age an estimated 83 000 used a wheelchair or similar device 0.2 % of that population A similar survey conducted in 2002 estimated use at 1.2 % of the population 15 years and older 4.5 % of the population 65 years and older and 0.2 % of the population under 15 years of age An earlier survey 1994 1995 data of noninstitutionalized individuals in the U S estimated that there were 1.6 million 0.6 % wheelchair users of all ages including 88 000 under age 18 years 0.12 % and 897 000 2.87 % 65 years of age and older Of the total group of wheelchair users 1 5 million used manual wheelchairs and 155 000 used electric wheelchairs The leading conditions associated with wheelchair use included stroke osteoarthritis multiple sclerosis absence or loss of lower extremity paraplegia orthopedic impairment of lower extremity heart disease cerebral palsy rheumatoid arthritis and diabetes At the same time that the population of mobility impaired individuals is growing advances have been made in mobility device and component technology Although difficult to quantify there appears to be increased use of power mobility devices including power wheelchairs and scooters or power operated vehicles Advances in wheeled mobility offer enhanced functionality Mobility devices have been shown to increase the activity participation and quality of life of individuals with mobility limitations The degree to which these wheeled mobility devices and components notably postural seating and positioning systems contribute to quality of life depends on the appropriateness of the wheeled mobility device selected for the patient and their utilization of the device However inappropriate mobility devices may result in harms including overuse or repetitive strain injuries pressure sores falls and accidents equipment abandonment and underutilization Interest in identifying an evidence based wheeled mobility service delivery process that could guide decisionmaking regarding coverage for individually configured mobility equipment and associated services often referred to as Complex Rehab Technology CRT prompted the nomination of this topic Evidence based guidelines for best practice might address areas such as critical components of the assessment and followup selection of appropriate equipment based on patient needs essential members of the service delivery team provider qualifications and frequency of reassessment To address this need we prepared a Technical Brief to identify and describe the literature and expert opinion regarding the process of wheelchair service delivery for long term wheelchair users with complex rehabilitation needs i e individuals with a primary diagnosis resulting from a congenital disorder progressive or degenerative neuromuscular disease or from certain types of injury or trauma who will require a wheelchair for mobility beyond a period of rehabilitation The Brief provides background information on the wheeled mobility service delivery process for stakeholders interested in wheelchair service delivery including researchers patients providers suppliers and payers of wheeled mobility It also identifies patient provider supplier and payer issues that may impact the service delivery process We recognize that consumers may obtain wheeled mobility devices from a variety of sources We have focused on service delivery for individuals whose complex rehabilitation needs most likely will require contributions from physicians therapists suppliers and technicians
