Program Audience

Primary care physicians.

Educational Needs Addressed

Preeclampsia is a pregnancy-specific condition that affects up to 8% of the gravid population. The syndrome is a leading cause of maternal and perinatal morbidity and mortality worldwide. Despite its relatively high prevalence, the etiology of preeclampsia remains elusive and the only definitive treatment is delivery. Women's health care providers have a responsibility for the diagnosis and management of preeclampsia and to be aware of the potential long-term health risks preeclampsia confers.

Educational Objectives

After participating in this CME activity, primary care physicians should be able to

1. Describe the approach to patient evaluation
2. Discuss the elements of appropriate maternal and fetal surveillance
3. Discuss the management of severe preeclampsia
4. Identify current standards of management in the inter- and postpartum periods

Preeclampsia is a pregnancy-specific condition that affects up to 8% of the gravid population. The syndrome is a leading cause of maternal and perinatal morbidity and mortality worldwide. Despite its relatively high prevalence, the etiology of preeclampsia remains elusive and the only definitive treatment is delivery. For pregnancies outside of term, the management of preeclampsia is a balance between promoting fetal maturity and preserving the life and well-being of both the mother and fetus.

CASE STUDY

Initial Presentation

A 28-year-old nulliparous woman presents for a prenatal appointment at 28 and 2/7 weeks estimated gestational age and is found to have a blood pressure of 142/95 mm Hg.

- What are the possible etiologies for this patient's hypertension?

Hypertension in the context of pregnancy is defined as a systolic blood pressure equal to or greater than 140 mm Hg or a diastolic reading of at least 90 mm Hg [1]. Further classification of the disease process depends on when in pregnancy hypertension is diagnosed and the associated clinical and laboratory findings.

Chronic hypertension is defined as hypertension (essential or secondary) that antedates pregnancy. The prevalence is approximately 3% [2]. For women whose prepregnancy blood pressure is unknown, the diagnosis can be made if the patient experiences sustained hypertension prior to 20 weeks of gestation. Although the definition of chronic hypertension is relatively straightforward, distinguishing it from a pregnancy-induced phenomenon can be a challenge.

Gestational hypertension is new-onset hypertension after 20 weeks of gestation without proteinuria [1]. If a patient truly has gestational hypertension, she should be normotensive by her 12th postpartum week; otherwise, she carries the diagnosis of chronic hypertension [1]. Women with gestational hypertension, especially those who develop it prior to 30 weeks, are more likely to develop preeclampsia.

Preeclampsia is gestational hypertension with new-onset proteinuria (defined as the excretion of  $\geq 0.3$  g protein in a 24-hour period). Should it not be possible to collect a 24-hour specimen, the persistence of 30 mg/dL or greater ( $\geq 1+$  reading on dipstick) in a random urine sample may be suggestive of 300 mg of excretion in 24 hours. In general, however, random
