

Two-Minute
Case Against
Limits
BY SHERI FINK

For many years, the American people have been told that the only way to solve the problem of the environment is to limit the use of resources. This is a dangerous and misleading message. The only way to solve the problem of the environment is to change the way we live. We must stop consuming so much and start living more simply. We must stop using so much energy and start saving energy. We must stop polluting the air and water and start cleaning up our mess. We must stop cutting down the trees and start planting more. We must stop wasting food and start eating more responsibly. We must stop driving so much and start walking, biking, or taking public transit. We must stop using so much plastic and start using more reusable items. We must stop using so much paper and start using more recycled paper. We must stop using so much water and start conserving water. We must stop using so much electricity and start using more energy-efficient appliances. We must stop using so much gas and start using more renewable energy. We must stop using so much land and start using more sustainable practices. We must stop using so much money and start saving money. We must stop using so much time and start using our time more wisely. We must stop using so much of everything and start using everything more responsibly. We must stop using so much of our lives and start living more fully. We must stop using so much of our planet and start taking care of our planet. We must stop using so much of our future and start building a better future. We must stop using so much of our world and start making our world a better place. We must stop using so much of our lives and start living more fully. We must stop using so much of our planet and start taking care of our planet. We must stop using so much of our future and start building a better future. We must stop using so much of our world and start making our world a better place.

"Often in life, the most important
question we can
ask ourselves is:
do we really have
the problem we think we have?"

Developing Writers of Argument Michael W.

Smith, Jon-Philip Imbrenda, 2017-12-22 The ability to make effective arguments is not only necessary in students' academic lives; it's a transferable skill that's essential to students' future success as critical thinkers and contributing members of society. But in the here and now, how do we engage students and ensure they understand argument writing's fundamental components? How do we take them from "Here's what I think" to "Here's what I think. Here's what makes me think that. And here's why it matters." This stunning full-color book by Michael Smith and Jon Philip Imbrenda shows the way with ready-to-implement lessons that make argument writing topical and relevant. Students are first asked to form arguments about subjects that matter to them and then to reflect on the structure of those arguments, a process that provides learners with valuable reusable structural models. Throughout the book, the authors provide helpful instructional tools including literary nonfiction and author-created simulated texts that inspire different points of view. Essential questions create a context that rewards argumentation. Lessons introduce students to the three essential elements of an argument: claim, data, and warrant, and how to make each effective. Questioning probes semantic differential scales and other innovative instructional approaches. Samples of writing from the authors' own students and enlightening details on how this work informed the authors' subsequent teaching approach. Complete with guidance on applying the lessons' techniques in a broader unit-wide context, Developing Writers of Argument offers a practical approach for instructing students in this crucial aspect of their lifelong development.
