Throughout the volume two main perspectives are considered: learning to write professionally and writing to learn the profession, both for initial occupational preparation and ongoing development within them. Learning to Communicate in Science and Engineering Mya Poe, Neal Lerner, Jennifer Craig, 2010-02-05 Case studies and pedagogical strategies to help science and engineering students improve their writing and speaking skills while developing professional identities. To many science and engineering students the task of writing may seem irrelevant to their future professional careers. At MIT, however, students discover that writing about their technical work is important, not only in solving real-world problems but also in developing their professional identities. MIT puts into practice the belief that engineers who don't write well end up working for engineers who do write well, requiring all students to take communications-intensive classes in which they learn from MIT faculty and writing instructors how to express their ideas in writing and in presentations. Students are challenged not only to think like professional scientists and engineers but also to communicate like them. This book offers in-depth case studies and pedagogical strategies from a range of science and engineering communication-intensive classes at MIT. It traces the progress of seventeen students from diverse backgrounds in seven classes that span five departments. Undergraduates in biology attempt to turn scientific findings into a research article; graduate students learn to define their research for scientific grant writing; undergraduates in biomedical engineering learn to use data as evidence; and students in aeronautic and astronautic engineering learn to communicate collaboratively. Each case study is introduced by a description of its theoretical and curricular context and an outline of the objectives for the students' activities. The studies describe the on-the-ground realities of working with faculty staff and students to achieve communication and course goals, offering lessons that can be easily applied to a wide variety of settings and institutions.
