

1. INTRODUCTION TO DSP PROCESSORS

A signal can be defined as a function that conveys information, generally about the state or behavior of a physical system. There are two basic types of signals viz Analog (continuous time signals which are defined along a continuum of times) and Digital (discrete-time).

Remarkably, under reasonable constraints, a continuous time signal can be adequately represented by samples, obtaining discrete time signals. Thus digital signal processing is an ideal choice for anyone who needs the performance advantage of digital manipulation along with today's analog reality.

Hence a processor which is designed to perform the special operations (digital manipulations) on the digital signal within very less time can be called as a Digital signal processor. The difference between a DSP processor, conventional microprocessor and a Microcontroller is listed below.
