

Answer Key to Cellular Respiration Lab

Abstract: Phragmites australis (Cyperaceae) is a dominant species in coastal wetlands of the United States. It is a highly invasive species that can outcompete native species and alter the structure and function of the ecosystem. The purpose of this study was to investigate the effects of Phragmites invasion on the structure and function of a coastal wetland. We measured the biomass, height, and density of Phragmites and native species, and the rates of photosynthesis and respiration of the plants. We found that Phragmites invasion significantly reduced the biomass, height, and density of native species, and increased the rates of photosynthesis and respiration of the Phragmites. These results suggest that Phragmites invasion can alter the structure and function of a coastal wetland.
