Computer Psychology

Dear E&MM,

I thoroughly enjoy your magazine, combining as it does my four great interests: music, electronics, computing and (since very recently) psychology. One of the most exciting possibilities in this broad area is the use of the computer in music as more than a workhorse for composition and re-gurgitation of it's user's own music, as a composer in its own right.

Martin Glover's letter in your September issue touched on this, and I feel obliged to correct some of the distortions which it contained.

Firstly, in describing the computer as working "on the principle of being able to answer the question - is it yes or no?" he is correct, but only as correct as someone who says that people work on the principle of electrons spinning round or leaving a nucleus of neutrons and protons. While both are true, neither describes the machine as a useful level.

Described in such forms, the computer indeed seems unlikely to be able to create a piece of music. However it would then also seem unlikely to be able to simulate paranoia so accurately that psychiatrists cannot reliably distinguish between "computer paranoid" dialogue and human paranoid dialogue. This has in fact been achieved (and is by no means the most impressive feat of Artificial Intelligence), so Mr Glover's description of a computer's functioning should not be taken as any indication of what computers are potentially capable of.

Mr Glover neglects the fact that there is a level at which the human brain operates in exactly this yes/no manner. So in theory there is nothing that the human brain can do that the computer cannot. Linked with the greater memory capabilities of the latter, the potential is astounding.

Mr Glover's second oversimplification is in stating that "at no time is there any input from the computer which has not originated from the programmer." Again, this is no more true of a computer than it could be of a human being. The computer can not only re-assemble segments of music fed to it, but also rewrite its own programs to invent new ways of doing this, or even make critical judgements of its constructions by comparison with other pieces of music or in response to listener reaction.

Even if one argues that any output from such a program is still originating from the programmer, then one would surely have to accept that the same is true of Mozart whose ability to compose "unfolded" from his genetic make-up and its interaction with his musical and other experience, ie, simply on interaction of programming with input from outside.

In summary, it can be said that as there is no known mental function which cannot be simulated by a computer, it must be theoretically possible to produce a computer system capable of composing music. The problem in implementing such a system is twofold: the complexity of human music-composing procedures is manifest, and must be unravelled to be simulated; furthermore the amount of experience which such a system would have to accumulate (or be given as a package) in order to produce any music with 'feeling' is immense.

Clearly such a system is a long way off, but we must never lose sight of the possibility through reasons of ignorance or scepticism. Apart from straight composition, other possibilities exist; one which I've often found, amusing is that of a system which monitors listeners' mood changes via psychological measures and adapts its musical output accordingly to produce the ultimate in either mood-fitting or mood-shifting music!

Anyone interested in the possibilities of Artificial Intelligence would be well advised to read Margaret Boden's "Artificial Intelligence And Natural Man" (ISBN 0 85527 700 9).

Kitting Up

Dear E&MM,

I am planning to buy an electronic drum kit that I can use primarily in a studio environment. It seems to be electronic because of the type of music I play (ie, the recording aspect, not the neighbours!)

My budget limit is around £600, and I wonder if you could tell me what is available under that sum. I don't really need a programmable kit as it will only be used for recording - so it would be an unnecessary expense.

Many thanks for a great magazine.

P.M. Haze
Beaconsfield
Bucks.

There are several types of kit that fall into this category - the mini kits and the full size drum kits. The first category covers the Mattel Synsonics Drums (around £110), The Kit (at £150) and the added advantage of the extra add-ons, and the M.P.C. (at around £599). The M.P.C. has the capability to interface with stagepads - which would allow you to build up a full system over a period of time - the extras would cost £200.

On the full kit side, your budget precludes the purchase of Simmons - but would allow for the new Kione Kit 2 from Honky Tunk - at about £499. (Reviewed in E&MM November 1983).

Drumming Dentist?

Dear Sirs,

I am in my final year of Dentistry at the University of Birmingham, and am preparing a dissertation on the role of Electronic Drums, comparing them with the role of the sound of real drums, in contemporary music.

I have used your magazine as a source for obtaining the names and addresses of manufacturers of Electronic Drums. Perhaps you could give me details or information on the Music Percussion Computer and any details of the new British products called the Desert Drums.

Yours faithfully,

G.A. Evans,
Llandudno, Gwynedd.
Further info on the MPC is available from MPC Electronics Ltd, The Gables, Station Road, Widdingham, Cambs CB4 5HG. Tel: 0554 60264. Desert Drums can be found at Atlatex Music, 1 Wallace Way, Hitchin, Herts. Tel: 0462 31513.

Great 'Syn'ths & PCBs

Dear Sirs,

I have recently constructed both the SYNTOM II and SYNAL and have found them to be excellent in terms of sound quality and design. I would like to use them to form a large 'percussion' system, but find that buying ready-made PCBs adds unnecessarily to the cost when I can perfectly adequately produce the boards myself. Therefore I hope you can advise me whether E&MM would be prepared to supply foil patterns by mail order - at a nominal fee, of course.

On the same subject I see from the latest issue, October 1983, that another correspondent has written to highlight your practice of not printing foil patterns; a policy which I'm sure you are aware is out of step with all other electronics magazines (even Elektor recently succumbed to pressure and now prints foil patterns for direct use when producing PCBs).

I'm sure the sale of PCBs is not the mainstay of E&MM's finances, as in my experience E&MM sells out faster than any other magazine!

Yours sincerely,
G.K. Prosser,
Clapton, London.

E&MM has no plans at this present stage to provide foil patterns for PCBs, even on a mail order basis. The reasoning behind this is simple: not enough people as yet have requested foil patterns, and due to the lack of space within the cramped printed pages, we cannot afford to include them, as it would most certainly reduce the space normally allocated to our projects. All we can say is that if the trend does alter in favour of foil patterns, then we would reconsider our position.

Transposer

Dear Sirs,

Some users of the E&MM Transposer have experienced quantisation noise problems, which manifests itself on low frequency signals in the absence of any 'masking' high frequencies. Although this can at times sound rather like distortion, it is quite easy to remove (unlike distortion!). Tim Orr overcame the problem in his excellent E&MM Digital Delay by boosting high frequencies on the input, and attenuating them on the output. This pre-emphasis/de-emphasis solution could not, however, be applied to the Transposer due to the spectrum shifting which takes place during transposition. In most cases, a little EQing, or even a little treble control tweaking will solve the problem. A more complete answer though, would be to use the HSR Dynamic Noise Filter on the output, which will very effectively reduce the quantisation noise, while retaining the clarity of the signal.
