

As the stigma behind mental health is slowly decreasing the quantity of people waiting for a diagnosis is surging, and the lack of support from the government has a lead role in the rise of suicides. Since learning about the mental health issues surrounding schools in the UK I have been eager to understand how to make a positive impact. Through studying psychology, I am keen to learn more about mental health, as well as the many other aspects of psychology at university, in particular educational psychology. My interest in psychology peaked when my brothers were not able to get support for their learning difficulties, such as dyslexia and ADHD. After getting a degree I would love to go into clinical psychology, specifically in a company which supports the general public free of charge, as mental health support is a necessity and should not be exorbitant.

In order to enhance my knowledge of psychology I decided to read 'In Therapy' by Susie Orbach, which allowed me to further see how conversations with psychotherapists really work. Additionally, I participated in an elective in which we watched and discussed films on psychology and applied our knowledge of psychology to the film. Another aspect of the course that I am eager to learn more about is the ethical dilemmas in psychology. Although we have begun to learn this topic at A Level, the course delves deeper into understanding morality and ethics with historical contexts, as well as considering ethical challenges in the future, which is exciting.

During weekly elective periods last year I went to a primary school and supported children in a variety of year groups with their reading, encouraging and promoting their abilities. Throughout this, I learnt that all children learn and develop at a different pace, and enjoy different aspects of school, often based on what they are best at. Furthermore, I worked at an after-school club for a year, again working with children of ranging ages. This experience allowed me to learn how to gain the trust of children to allow them to express themselves openly. I decided to take this position in order to gain more experience in working with children, and to be able to apply my limited knowledge in childcare, whilst further learning about how to help the children in a productive way, which would positively improve their developing years. Not only did I learn more about working with children, but the experience also allowed me to apply my psychological knowledge and learn more about role-modelling and operant conditioning, shown in studies by Kohlberg and Piaget which we study at A Level.

During my childhood, I took part in dance lessons, and for several years I have been part of a musical theatre group, and therefore have performed on stage a multitude of times. I began dance firstly as a source of enjoyment outside of school, however, as I continued, I realised that these classes had allowed my confidence to grow, as well as increasing my ability to communicate responsibly with others. Furthermore, last year I performed in the school production of 'Teachers', and this current year I will be taking part in both 'We Will Rock You' and 'Nativity'. Part of the reason I
