Counselling Skills for a Dietitian

A registered dietitian / clinical nutritionist / medical nutrition therapist is an expert in the multifaceted field of food and nutrition, who knows well about food composition and understands the various economic, social, psychological, and physiological factors that influence food choices, and the relationship of these factors to health and diseases. She / he is the health care professional uniquely qualified for the role of a nutrition communicator, who is a skilled listener and a translator of theoretical information and abstract ideas into concrete actions and practical skills for clients.

What are counselling skills?

To better understand and advance the process of nutrition counselling, dietetic professionals and researchers have characterized the role of the dietitian, delineated the process of nutrition counselling, and identified essential nutrition counselling skills, since the last five decades. Counselling skills are a necessity for dietitians to build trust and rapport with their patients, to comply with nutrition therapies and to improve their dietary behaviors.

Counseling skills include both verbal and non-verbal communication. Verbal communication includes actively listening to patients, using clear language and limiting the use of nutrition / medical jargon, expressing compassion, empathy and understanding, and being able to communicate cross-culturally. Non-verbal communication involves using body language, physical gestures, eye contact and facial expressions. If verbal and non-verbal communication are lacking or absent, the patient may not be motivated to comply with nutrition therapies and change their dietary behaviors. Compliance among patients to comply with nutrition therapies and ultimately change patient's dietary behaviors is a critical endeavor, which can be fruitful only with good communication skills.

Since nutrition counselling is a conversation or dialogue between the dietitian and client, the dietitian needs the following communication skills in order to facilitate change:

Attending

Attending refers to the ways in which dietitians can be "with" their clients, both physically and psychologically. Effective attending allows clients to share their world with the dietitian and also puts them in a position to listen carefully to what their clients are saying. Adopting a bodily posture and eye contact that indicates involvement with client helps the client to speak openly. Try creating a relaxed or natural environment with the client and listen carefully to what their clients are saying or not saying.

Listening

Listening refers to the ability of dietitians to capture and understand the messages clients communicate as they tell their stories, whether those messages are transmitted verbally or nonverbally. Active listening involves the following skills:

- It is very important to listen to and understand the client's verbal messages. The dietitian has to listen to the mix of experiences, behaviour and feelings the client uses to describe his or her problems associated with diet and health. Also "hear" what the client is not saying (nonverbal messages).
- Dietitians should learn how to listen to and read nonverbal messages such as bodily behaviour, facial

Counselling Skills For Dietitians Counselling Skills For Dietitians:

Counselling Skills for Dietitians Judy Gable, 2008-04-15 Dietitians need to use advanced communication skills as well as technical expertise in order to assess clients' needs, identify their problems and help them to manage their diet and lifestyle. The ability to develop a helping relationship is fundamental to achieving a mutually satisfactory dietetic interview. Counselling skills defined as advanced communication skills used intentionally in a helping relationship are therefore essential for good dietetic practice at all levels of the profession. This book demonstrates how a practitioner can develop a counselling approach and employ appropriate counselling skills to overcome the communication difficulties encountered by dietitians and those engaged in helping clients change their eating behaviour. New material in the second edition includes an expanded section on the patient interview including assessing motivation and applying aspects of CBT cognitive behavioural therapy and a new section on personal development including examples and discussion on issues of interprofessional communication and working in a multidisciplinary team.

Counselling Skills for Dietitians Judy Gable, Tamara Herrmann, 2015-12-22 The third edition Counselling Skills for Dietitians has been fully revised and updated to reflect the recent developments, research and interests in the field. It explores the skills required for dietetic counselling and includes frequent examples of dialogue from patient consultations as well as exercises and activities so that the reader can undergo experiential learning relevant to their practice. Includes examples from daily practice to illustrate the difficulties encountered by dietitians and demonstrate the application of counselling skills. Clearly explains theoretical models of accepted counselling practice underpinning the skills described. Has been updated to include additional information on topics such as assertiveness skills and eating distress. Addresses practical and psychological issues faced by dietitians and patients. Includes the latest research evidence for counselling skills in dietetic practice. Draws upon research evidence, theory and experience from the fields of psychotherapy and counselling. Now provides access to a range of supportive online material including videos of consultations, case studies and resources for trainers.

Nutrition Therapy Bridget M. Klawitter, 2007 This practical text presents a wealth of fresh ideas and techniques for strengthening counseling skills to face real world issues in nutrition therapy. It offers students and practitioners advice on ways to increase referrals, decrease no shows and overcome common barriers to effective counseling. The Third Edition also explores strategies for counseling patients with AIDS, diabetes and other chronic diseases, for group therapy, for teaching developmental skills and for end of life counseling. This edition has a new reader friendly design and layout. New learning activities including case studies and critical thinking exercises encourage students to apply what they have learned to common situations in clinical practice.
